

How Has the Protocol 12 of the Learned Elders of Zion Brought About Control of the Press?

Sixbert SANGWA • July 23, 2024

The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion is a document that outlines a sinister plan for global domination by a secretive organization often linked to the Illuminati. It contains 24 protocols detailing a step-by-step strategy to control the world through manipulation, propaganda, and deception. Protocol 12, titled "Control of the Press," reveals the group's tactics for manipulating information and controlling public opinion. The goal is to subvert societal morals and ensure all disseminated information aligns with the group's agenda, ultimately altering God's design and advancing the rise of the Antichrist. This article will delve into the key provisions of Protocol 12 and their historical impact on global geopolitics, framed within a biblical perspective.

Key Provisions of Protocol 12

Redefining Freedom

The protocol begins by redefining the concept of freedom: "The word 'freedom,' which can be interpreted in various ways, is defined by us as follows – Freedom is the right to do that which the law allows." This interpretation places control of the laws—and thus freedom itself—in the hands of the group, ensuring that only what benefits them is permitted.

In today's context, the redefinition of freedom can be seen in various authoritarian regimes where laws are crafted to limit genuine freedoms under the guise of legality. For example, the Soviet Union under Stalin created laws that severely restricted free speech and press freedom, justifying these restrictions as necessary for state security. Today, similar tactics are observed in countries like North Korea and China, where laws are designed to control and suppress dissent. Even in countries where the law supposedly provides freedom of speech, individuals are often penalized for speaking up, highlighting that this freedom is often more theoretical than practical.

Control of the Press

The protocol outlines measures to control the press through stamp taxes, caution-money deposits, and fines: "We shall saddle and bridle [the press] with a tight curb." These measures are designed to ensure that any publication attacking the group will face severe financial penalties, effectively silencing dissent. The establishment of state-controlled media is a common tactic. In Nazi Germany, Joseph Goebbels, as Minister of Propaganda, ensured all media strictly followed the Nazi party line. Currently, in countries like Russia, the government exerts significant control over major news outlets, using them to propagate state-approved narratives and suppress critical voices. Any information about the group is always dismissed as mere conspiracy theories. In recent times, with the advancement of technologies, even generative AI is banned from offering any such information. This demonstrates the lengths to which these regimes will go to control the narrative and prevent the spread of information that could undermine their power. Similar tactics can be seen in other authoritarian regimes where dissent is not tolerated, and information is tightly controlled.

Monopolizing News Agencies

The group aims to control all news agencies, filtering information before it reaches the public: "Not a single announcement will reach the public without our control." This strategy ensures that only their narrative is promoted, creating a controlled and manipulated information environment.

The creation of state-run news agencies that dominate the dissemination of information is evident in many authoritarian regimes. Agencies like TASS in the Soviet Union and Xinhua in China have historically served as mouthpieces for their governments, controlling the flow of information to ensure it aligns with state interests. In recent years, the rise of social media and digital platforms has introduced new methods of information control. Algorithms on platforms like Facebook and Twitter can be manipulated to suppress certain viewpoints while promoting others, effectively controlling the narrative without overt state intervention. Additionally, governments in countries such as Russia and Turkey have implemented strict internet censorship laws, blocking access to content that contradicts state-approved narratives. The use of deepfake technology and AI-generated content further complicates the information landscape, making it harder for the public to discern truth from manipulated content. These modern tactics demonstrate the ongoing relevance of the strategies outlined in Protocol 12, highlighting how control over information remains a powerful tool for those seeking to influence and dominate public perception.

Creation of Controlled Publications

The protocol 12 describes the establishment of their own publications to create the illusion of diverse opinions while subtly guiding public thought: "If we give permits for ten journals, we shall ourselves found thirty." These controlled publications would appear to represent a range of viewpoints but would ultimately serve the group's agenda. The tactic of flooding the market with state-controlled or sympathetic publications is evident in many countries. For example, during the Cold War, both the US and the USSR created numerous publications to spread their respective ideologies. In modern times, media conglomerates owned by a few powerful individuals or corporations often promote a particular agenda, subtly shaping public opinion.

Use of the Press as an Educative Tool

By controlling literature and journalism, the group aims to influence mental development and prevent the masses from being led astray by what they consider to be "phantom blessings" of progress and freedom. The protocol states: "The instrument of thought will become an educative means on the hands of our government." Propaganda used as an educational tool is a hallmark of totalitarian states. The Nazi regime, for example, used films, literature, and education to instill its ideology in the German populace. In North Korea, the government strictly controls educational materials to ensure loyalty to the ruling Kim family. Additionally, in the modern era, social media platforms are used to promote falsehoods such as nudity, LGBT ideologies, prostitution, occultism, and other morally questionable content, thus furthering the agenda of manipulation and control.

Stamp Taxes and Caution-Money

To control and reduce the number of publications, the protocol proposes stamp taxes and caution-money deposits: "We shall impose on it, as on all printed matter, stamp taxes per sheet and deposits of caution-money." This financial burden discourages the publication of materials not aligned with their interests. For example, during the early 19th century, Britain imposed a stamp tax on newspapers to curb the radical press. In contemporary times, onerous licensing fees and taxes on independent media in countries like some countries have forced many outlets to shut down or self-censor.

Professional Secrecy and Control of Journalists

According to the same protocol, journalists would be controlled through professional secrecy and blackmail, ensuring they adhere to the group's agenda: "Not one journalist will venture to betray this secret, for not one of them is ever admitted to practice literature unless his whole past has some disgraceful sore or other." The use of controlled opposition to manipulate and identify dissenters is a tactic used by many regimes. The Soviet KGB, for instance, established fake dissident groups to trap real opponents. Today, this can be seen in how certain governments create or co-opt opposition media to monitor and control dissent.

Provincial Influence

The protocol further emphasizes the importance of inflaming hopes and impulses in the provinces to influence the capitals and create the appearance of widespread support for their agenda: "Our calculations are especially extended to the provinces." Inflaming provincial sentiments to control the capitals has historical precedents. During the Chinese Cultural Revolution, Mao Zedong mobilized rural populations against perceived urban elites. Today, populist movements often leverage rural discontent to influence national politics.

Manipulation of Public Perception

Protocol 12 outlines methods to manipulate public perception, ensuring opponents cannot effectively counter their narrative: "We shall have a sure triumph over our opponents since they will not have at their disposition organs of the press in which they can give full and final expression to their views." This suppression of opposing views by controlling media outlets is a common strategy today. Many governments, systematically shut down independent media and used state media to promote their agenda, leaving opponents with limited platforms to voice their views.

Historical Impact on Geopolitics

The strategies outlined in Protocol 12 have historical precedents and continue to influence modern geopolitics. State-controlled propaganda during the early 20th century, particularly during the World Wars, mirrors these tactics. Governments used media to sway public opinion, justify wars, and maintain control over their populations. During the Cold War, for example, the United States and the Soviet Union engaged in extensive propaganda campaigns, using media to promote their ideologies and undermine each other. This period saw the proliferation of state-controlled news agencies that mirrored the control described in Protocol 12. In more recent times, the advent of digital media and social networks has expanded the reach and influence of those who control the press, with misinformation and "fake news" becoming powerful tools in political and social manipulation.

Today, the control of the press remains a critical issue. The concentration of media ownership in the hands of a few powerful entities raises concerns about the objectivity and integrity of the information we consume. As Christians, we must be discerning and seek the truth in all things. Philippians 4:8 encourages us to focus on "whatever is true, whatever is noble, whatever is right, whatever is pure, whatever is lovely, whatever is admirable." The rise of independent and alternative media sources provides an opportunity to challenge dominant narratives and seek a more balanced perspective. However, it also requires vigilance to ensure that these sources maintain high standards of integrity and truthfulness.

A Biblical Perspective

As Christians, it is essential to examine these developments through the lens of Scripture. The Bible warns of the dangers of deceit and the manipulation of truth. Jesus speaks of the devil as "a liar and the father of lies" (John 8:44). The control of the press, as described in Protocol 12, can be seen as a manifestation of this deception, aimed at leading people away from the truth. Furthermore, Ephesians 6:12 reminds us that "our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers, against the authorities, against the powers of this dark world and against the spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly realms." The strategies outlined in the protocol can be perceived as part of this broader spiritual battle, where the forces of evil seek to control and corrupt human societies.

Conclusion

The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, particularly Protocol 12 on "Control of the Press," offer a chilling glimpse into the strategies of those who seek to manipulate and dominate the world. As Christians, we are called to be aware of these manipulations and to seek the truth in all things. By understanding the historical and ongoing impact of such strategies, we can better navigate the complex media landscape of today and remain steadfast in our commitment to God's truth. Let us be vigilant, discerning, and always anchored in the Word of God as we confront the deceptions of our time.
